I am very opposed to allowing cell phones on commercial flights. The use of cell phones would interfere with the safety and emergency announcements by the crew. By using a cell phone while on board, there is a huge potential for a passenger to not hear or to ignore the safety or emergency announcements. Because people tend to talk fairly loud on cell phones, especially when using hands free devices, there is also the potential for passengers in the vicinity of the cell phone user to not hear the safety and emergency announcements. There is also the potential that disruption of the use of the pico cell could cause a cell phone user to become disorderly and possibly interfere with the flight crew when a call is interrupted. I do a lot of flying and believe that this is a small but very real possibility.
